Brian Goehring : Indigenous Peoples of the World (Purich's Aboriginal Issues Series) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Indigenous Peoples of the World (Purich's Aboriginal Issues Series):

How did Pizarro subjugate the Inca Empire with less than 500 men? How did debates in 16th century Spain between de Sepulveda and de Las Casas lay the basis for the legal concept of Aboriginal title? Providing a broad comparison of historical, social, and cultural aspects of Indigenous groups around the world, this slim volume answers these questions and more, while discussing the challenges these groups face postEuropean contact. Goehring draws parallels in the history and struggles tackled, including the right to self-determination, land recognition, and an economy which allows for participation on Indigenous peoples terms is a worldwide occurrence.

In this book, author Brian Goehring introduces the Indigenous Peoples of the world, describing who they are, where they live, looking at similarities in their history and future challenges. Goehring points out how the Indigenous struggle for self-determination, a land base and an economy which allows for participation on their terms is a world wide phenomena. Some of the interesting questions answered in this book include: How the debates in 16th century Spain between de Sepulveda and de Las Casas laid the basis for the legal concept of Aboriginal title. How many Bhil and other Indigenous Peoples will be displaced by the Narmada Dam Project? How did Pizarro subjugate the Inca Empire with less than 500 men? Where do the Penan Peoples live? [This book] provides a valuable resource to all people seeking to understand the relationship between Indigenous Peoples and the society with which they co-exist.
