This is the biography of James Louis Petigru, the dean of the South Carolina bar in the antebellum period and a major figure in the state's political and social development. As Petigru the man is explained, so too are the particulars of law practice in a 19th-century southern city.

About the AuthorWILLIAM H. PEASE and JANE H. PEASE are professors emeriti at the University of Maine and associates in history at the College of Charleston in South Carolina.
